Synopsis

Josep Renau is a key figure in Spain in relation to the once burning issue of the political commitment of the artist. He often defined himself as a communist who painted rather than a communist painter, indicating that his degree of involvement in political struggles was not that of a mere fellow-traveller but of a fervent militant and even a public leader. The three major periods in which the book divides his artistic career -the Valencian period, exile in Mexico and the final years in communist Berlin- are primarily determined by personal events.
